

WE NEED THE PEOPLE

who need affordable housing

There's a shortage of affordable housing in the Chicago area. A critical shortage. And if you think it just affects the very poor, think again. Firefighters and police officers and nurses can't afford a place to live in or near the communities they serve. Seniors are being forced to move away from the very place they call home. Young people can't get started in the towns and cities where they grew up.

Making sure we build affordable housing is in everyone's interest. Yet, even though a great majority of people support more moderate- and low-income housing where they live, the few voices against can be pretty loud. So when affordable housing is proposed in your community, it's important to speak up and say, "Yes." Affordable housing is worth fighting for.

Housing Illinois is a network of 45 housing organizations, lending institutions, housing developers, foundations, public agencies, and municipal leaders working to increase the acceptance and availability of affordable housing in the Chicago area.
